

Washington

July 21, 1868.

Dear Al Wise:

I should have answered your welcome note before - but better late than never.

I remember you very well, dear boy - and though you must now be indeed quite different from the little child I used to lift up in my arms & kiss, as I passed along the street, I hope we may yet call each other friends. In response to your letter I send - not my whole volume of Leaves of Grass - but Drum-Taps, a part of it, consisting of pieces created out of the war - several of them written in Camp, hospital, or on the field.

The other little volume has been published by John Burroughs, who, being a great friend of mine, views every thing relating to me & my works from an extremely partial point of view. I send the books by same mail with this - Directed same address.

- I send you my love, & I wish you to give my friendliest remembrances to your parents.

Now along toward the end of third week of grip that holds on by day & night like grim death on top of my other general tribulations — I send you a little "Bruno" by Prof. Brinton here (do you know him?) of the School of the great modern scientists & progressive metaphysicians — I'll probably have to give up reading my Death of Lincoln paper 15th tho' I wanted to muchly — I don't think any thing really serious hits me
